West Sacto gets through 'Y2K' bug uneventfully

Local police and fire officials reported that the infamous "Y2K" New Year passed without incident in West Sacramento. Computer glitches and errant human behavior were both somewhat feared as the clock rolled from Dec. 31, 1999, to Jan. 1, 2000, on Friday night. Both departments staffed extra personnel and the city set up its "emergency operations center" as a precaution for the event.

Fire chief Frederick Postel said he knew of no Y2K-related calls affecting his department due to the New Year.

Police Lt. David Farmer echoed that judgment of a calm Y2K.

"It was a very quiet New Year's Eve," said Farmer. "Everybody conducted themselves in a nonviolent manner. There was some scattered fireworks and some gunshots. There are people who still celebrate in ways that are ill-advised and dangerous, and firing guns in the air is somewhat dangerous because what goes up must come down."

Communications failures, building alarm problems and other troubles feared when computer clocks rolled over to the year 2000 did not materialize to any significant extent, to the best knowledge of the local police and fire departments.

'Substantial' reward offered in city hall vandalism case

Police are still seeking leads in two cases occurring in late 1999.

A "substantial" reward is offered for information resulting in the apprehension of those responsible for vandalizing West Sacramento City Hall, reports Lt. David Farmer of the West Sacramento Police Dept.

Police are also seeking leads in the case involving an infant found abandoned in the city's Meadowdale subdivision.

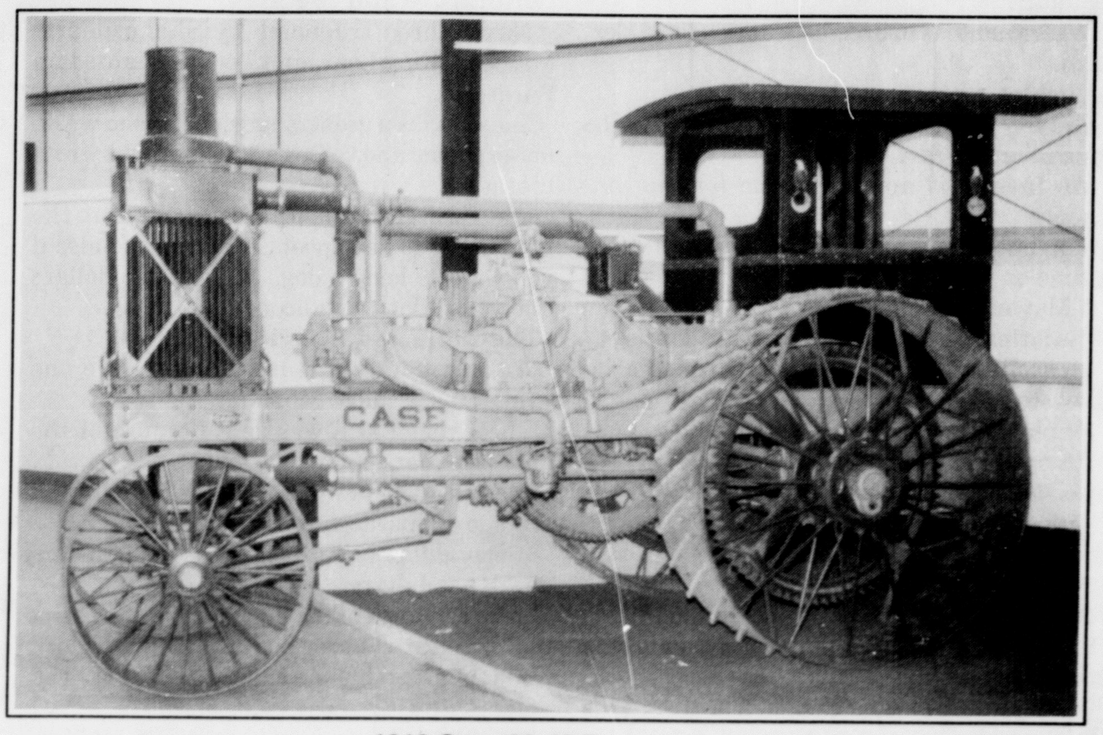
Anyone with information on either case is asked to call Farmer at 372-2461 ext. 262.

Agriculture/tractor museum: a 'must see'

By Daryl Fisher
Features Editor

Unknown to many West Sacramentans, there is a world class vintage agriculture tractor and truck museum just 14 or 15 miles down the road from us. It's called the Heidrick Ag History Center and it's located just before you reach Woodland at the Interstate 5 and County Road 102 interchange. It's also the home of the Hays Antique Truck Museum and altogether there are more than 250 lovingly restored old tractors and trucks on display at the ten acre facility.

"My father, A.W. Hays, ran the largest agricultural trucking company in the state," explained Don Hays, the executive director of the Center, "and when he sold the business in 1978, he began spending a lot of his free time restoring old trucks. By the time he passed away in 1992, he had 300 of them and that played a major role in getting this all started. But even more important is the wonderful collection of Fred C. Heidrick, who is in his 80s now and he began gathering up old farm machinery when he was just a boy. We've only got about 25 percent of his collection on display, but in many ways it's the heart of the museum. We're a non-profit organization and we've been averaging about 40,000 visitors a year. We're also a learning facility, and in October alone, we usually have about 3,000 school children come and visit us."



1918 Case 20-40 Tractor

The featured tractor at the Heidrick Ag History Center this month is the Case 20-40 (pictured above) and it was restored by Nate Lynch, one of the many vital volunteers who make the museum possible. The cab was completely rebuilt and in order to free the engine, the spark plugs were removed and the cylinders filled with diesel to loosen the rust, and over a period of time, the pistons were also nudged loose without breaking the rings. Some of the unique features of the Case 20-40 are that it has no water pump and that water is circulated by a thermo-siphon system; the radiator has no fan and the engine exhaust is directed up through the chimney of the radiator which creates a draw of air through the radiator cooling tubes; the peak of its production was 1913, when 1,173 tractors were manufactured; and that road speeds in two forward gears are two mph for plowing and heavy work and three mph for hauling and other roadwork.

"The world of agriculture has really changed since the machines we have on display were in use," said Hays. "Now days the new vehicles are controlled by global positioning satellites and advanced technology is vital to everything from seed selection to fertilizer. The old tractors used steel wheels, not rubber ones, and there was no air-conditioning in the cabs or any of the other luxuries that are now almost standard in the new machines. But the way things used to be done has a very rich and important history and that is what we have tried to preserve here at the Center. Agriculture played a huge role in the development of this part of California and we hope everyone will take a few minutes out of their day to drop by the museum and see all of our wonderful displays."

The Heidrick Ag History Center is located at 1962 Hays Lane in Woodland. It opens at 10 a.m., although it is closed on Monday and Tuesday in the winter months.

Dept. head will investigate his superior:

School district debates method of handling parent's complaint

By Steve Marschke
News-Ledger Editor

Washington Unified School District officials have decided to take the investigation of a complaint involving the district superintendent away from their outside attorney's office, and hand it to one of the district's staff members.

The "in-house" investigation is being done in response to a complaint filed by a district parent. The superintendent and parent became involved in an argument at the district office on Nov. 5, during which Superintendent Dr. Dennis Kelleher instructed his secretary to call the police.

Details of the unusual complaint process were provided to the News-Ledger by several of those involved in the investigation, who spoke on condition of anonymity. The sources agree that:

During the Nov. 5 shouting match between Kelleher and the parent, Kelleher instructed his secretary to call the police -- specifically, Lt. David Farmer, who is also a school board member. Farmer routed the request to police dispatch, and the parent waited for the police outside the building. Two officers spoke to her but did not arrest her. She later filed a formal complaint to the district about the incident, alleging she was mistreated by Kelleher.

At a December closed meeting of the school board, previous school board president Pat Flint notified the board that she was passing the parent's complaint along to the school board's outside attorney to be processed. There was no objection at the time by any of the other board members. But current board president Ardeene Westvik later removed attorney Jack Parham from the case. David Kopperud, the district's director of personnel and pupil services, was instead asked to investigate the complaint.

That decision has raised some eyebrows among district employees.

Kopperud works underneath Kelleher, the subject of the investigation. Kopperud's name also appears in the complaint, since he played a role in some of the events which led up to the argument between Kelleher and the parent.

Other recent complaints involving superintendents at WUSD have been passed to an outside investigator -- at the advice of district legal counsel, and to avoid a conflict of interest. The decision by new board president Westvik to cancel the attorney's involvement and move the investigation to Kopperud's office was also made outside of any school board meeting -- raising questions about who had the authority to supersede a decision made by a former board president with the apparent consent of the rest of the board.

Witnesses have been invited to visit district offices this week to give their view of the facts of the argument between Kelleher and the parent, and Kopperud has told them that Kelleher will be present and allowed to participate when they do.

The hearings are not a criminal trial of any sort, but an internal fact-finding investigation.

Board president Westvik answered questions about the investigation yesterday.

She explained that Kelleher had no role in moving the investigation from the attorney's office to Kopperud's office, "other than to write a letter saying 'I don't think it's fair for (Parham) to be involved in this.' "

Kelleher and Parham have been angry opponents on issues in the past.

She added that she took the authority to send the complaint investigation to Kopperud, after a discussion with board member Farmer. The school board as a whole had no regularly scheduled meetings during the time period during which the district needed to begin its response to the citizen's complaint, she explained.

"We could have hired someone else (to do the investigation), and maybe we will yet," said Westvik. "But in the meantime, we will go through policy. I say, let's follow the policy, and if the rest of the board doesn't like what I did, they can vote me down at the next meeting."

Westvik said that the district has a very clear policy about how to investigate a complaint against an employee -- including the superintendent -- and that her action helped W.U.S.D. to follow that policy.

"It is our lawyer who gave us that policy and who is now recommending that we don't follow it," she said.

Two other sources have reported that the lawyer had recommended a modification to that policy before this incident, but agreed that the change had not been implemented by the district.

Westvik was asked if it was appropriate to allow a subordinate to gather information for a complaint investigation involving his superior, and for the superior to be allowed to participate in these interviews of witnesses.

"He has his legal rights," she answered. "In this particular case, I don't think there's a problem. You're basically just talking to people to find out what they heard. The whole thing will be taped. There are two trained investigators on the board. If the board doesn't like the results of the investigation, we can order a new one."

As for the argument between the superintendent and parent which sparked the controversy, several parties involved agreed that it involved -- at worst -- a loss of temper.

The woman's name is at this time being withheld by the News-Ledger because the issue involves her daughter, a local high school student.

Some time ago, the daughter had been injured during a fight with another student at the school. Both were given expulsion orders, later suspended to allow the woman's daughter to remain at River City. The other girl was moved to Yolo High School and, as is standard, ordered not to return to River City.

On Nov. 5, the girl who remained at River City High School noticed the other pupil back on campus. She called her mother, who came to the school and complained to the principal. The principal -- new on the job -- was apparently unaware that the other child was prohibited from being on campus, and did not offer a direct remedy.

So the parent went to the district office to seek help, and the argument resulted.

Reportedly, the parent first tried to speak with Kopperud, the district director of personnel and pupil services, who had jurisdiction over the problem involving the two students. But he was unable or unwilling to see her, so she spoke with Kelleher..

Kelleher declined comment for this report.

Kopperud could not immediately be reached and did not immediately return a phone call from the News-Ledger.

It was a Happy New Year for San Francisco 49ers even though they lost for the 11th time in 12 games but the good news is just around the corner. The Falcons (5-11) beat the Niners 34-29 on Monday night but the good news is the 49ers (4-12) pick ahead of Atlanta in the April college draft. The 49ers should end up with the third overall selection, unless they decide to trade away their highest draft choice since 1989.

The Raiders finished the season on a high note by knocking the Kansas City Chiefs out the playoffs. I started the New Year on a good note with my weekly picks improving to (5 wins, 2 losses and one game to go!) I picked 4 winners in the NFL but lost 2 college picks and the National Championship game is on Tuesday night. I write this article on Monday nights, right after the Monday night game. This week take the Redskins, Vikings, Miami (+ 4) and Buffalo (+5 ½) to cover the spread.

The Sacramento Kings are on the road on Jan.4th in Cleveland and will pass through Toronto and finish up on Friday, Jan. 7 in Boston. Their next home game is on Sunday, Jan. 9th against Indiana.

Boxing promoter, Don Chargin, is hosting another ESPN2 show on Friday, Jan. 7th at the Memorial Auditorium. The fight card will feature two 22-year-old twins from Mexico. Heriberto Ruiz (18-0) is the WBC's No. 6 super-flyweight contender (115 lbs.) and his twin brother Edel Ruiz (19-1-2,12 KO's) will be in 10 round bouts on the Friday night at the fights. Also, in 10 rounder is new West Sacramento resident Juan Lazcano (20-2-1, 15 KO's) against Julian Wheeler (17-4-1), who defeated Jorrin in the amateurs. Tickets, $22, $32, and $42 will be on sale in West Sacramento at Pro-Venture Travel 1420 Merkley Ave. (372-9294).

See ya next week!!

The bidding:

South	West	North	East
1 ♠	1 ♥	Dble	4 ♥
5 NT	Pass	6 ♠	Pass
7 ♠	Dble

Opening lead — king of diamonds.

How can you bid a grand slam missing the ace of trumps and still come out ahead? Believe it or not, it actually happened when teams from Washington, D.C., and Chicago clashed in the finals of the 1988 Grand National Team championship. The bidding shown took place at the table where Jack Oest of Chicago held the South hand. North's double was "negative," promising four spades. Oest's five-no-trump bid, to his way of thinking, asked about the quality of North's spades, and he interpreted the six-club response as showing the spade ace. He thereupon leaped to seven spades, which West quietly but assuredly doubled.

Declarer ruffed the opening diamond lead and sheepishly led a trump. West took the ace and tried the ace of hearts, but South ruffed, drew the last trump and claimed.

Minus 100 didn't figure to be a winning result for North-South, and things certainly looked gloomy when the Washington pair at the other table sensibly stopped in six spades on this auction:

South	West	North	East
1 ♣	1 ♥	Dble	4 ♥
6 ♥	Dble	Pass	Pass

Redble

South's redouble gave West, Gerald Caravelli, pause for thought. He asked himself how declarer could be so certain that six spades would make and concluded that South expected to lose no tricks in the red suits. This left declarer with a black two-suiter, so Caravelli decided that his best chance to defeat the slam was to find his partner with no clubs, or one club and two trumps.

Accordingly, he led a club and was delighted when East ruffed. That, plus the ace of trumps, gave East-West a one-trick set. Redoubled, this came to 200 points, giving the Chicagoans a net gain of 100 points, or 3 IMPS, on the deal.

OPINION

NEWS-LEDGER EDITORIAL:

Living history

We just lived through an anecdote.

Hundreds of years from now -- or even thousands, if the human race is lucky enough to make it that far -- people will look back on our transition to the year 2000 and attempt to characterize it. They will try to describe what the year meant in human history, and what changes we were experiencing when it snuck up on us and walloped us over the back of the head.

At the top of the list of these changes, they will put technology. Mankind had visited the moon for the first time just before 2000, and computers (still primitive, slow and unintelligent) were becoming important to the future of virtually every human society by 1999.

When they talk about the beginning of this millenium (which doesn't really start til 2001, but let's not split hairs), they will tell the anecdote of the Y2K bug. Fresh-faced undergrads will write term papers in science and sociology about how we faced this faceless monster.

What they will talk about is how our Y2K fears illustrated our suddenly-monumental dependence on technology. Only a generation earlier, computer technology was still in the "idea" and "expensive toy" phase. The slide rule ruled. But by 1999, most aspects of every industrial society depended in one way or another on computers. Air travel, nuclear warheads, cash registers and gas pumps -- all functioned at the mercy of the silicon chip.

This technology evolution happened so rapidly, in fact, that many computers built only a half-dozen years before 2000 weren't even designed to handle the turnover from the year 1999 to 2000! The revolution was always out of control.

So on December 31, 1999, many people were afraid. At stores like the Raley's supermarket in West Sacramento, citizens bought flashlights and batteries which were conveniently stacked to face them on a special Y2K display as they entered. Humans also stocked up on containers of drinking water. Residents left many of the store's shelves bare, and strode through the parking lot clutching their Energizers and Vienna sausages to their chests while watching their neighbors through narrowed eyes.

This is how they got ready for the arrival of the year which was a stranger to their computers: they waited in fear.

But at the stroke of midnight, December 31, 1999, very little happened. Godiva's in New York couldn't sell chocolate for a little while. A computer at the News-Ledger in West Sacramento decided it was 1980 again (but then, fashion critics had long criticized its editor for pretty much the same mistake). That's about it.

So some of these fears turned out to be just a bunch of hooey. And some of the preparations which people made to fix these primitive computers quite simply paid off. The world rolled into the year 2000 in no better or worse shape than it had been in 1999.

But the fear itself? Now, that was an interesting thing. Most of the people who worked in computer-related fields had little of this fear. They knew that Y2K was going to be no big deal; that this potential glitch in their glittering new technology was a fixable thing. It was no "boogeyman"; it was just programming. Retype a few lines, and it will be all right.

It was those who were not fluent in technology who bought the canned food and shotguns and night vision goggles and then sat on their roofs and waited for looters at midnight.

What this showed humans what that they had developed a new elite, which they called techno-geeks. These elite were computer professionals who had a grip on the technology which was becoming so important to the race. All the rest of the human race looked on as outsiders, fearing what they could not understand. The techno-geeks dressed up in their best shirts with their best pocket protectors and went out to party on New Year's Eve. The rabble, meanwhile, sat at home with their bottled water and Spam and shortwave radios and felt themselves to be obsolete They had a glimmer of an understanding that their lives were no longer completely in their own control. Maybe they couldn't say it that way, but they knew.

It was kind of like the earlier times, when Gutenberg invented his printing press and knowledge could, for the first time, be distributed to large numbers of people. The future belonged to those who could read these books. They owned this future; they spoke its language. To the illiterate, there was only gravedigging or scullery work as a profession.

Or it was like a time earlier than that, when some men learned to tame fire. With a simple campfire, they found a way to augment their precious body heat and keep predators away. Oh, how those who did not know the secret of fire must have looked on in jealousy, standing shivering in the cold darkness beyond, completely unwitting that a mere three feet behind them near those trees was an approaching sabre-toothed tiger (or something. You get the point.).

Of course, after the year 2000 came the beginning of the time when technology spiraled upward, and not even the most techno-savvy human mind could keep up with it. After that, it took computers to design computers, and computers to fix computers. No unaugmented human brain could possibly understand the smallest bit of the new technologies, and the whole darn race became dependent on the charity of their mechanical creations.

But that brings us to the Y3K fiasco, which is a whole different lecture.

Letters to the Editor

Councilman responds:

(Editor's note: Last week's News-Ledger editorial touched on a number of topics and included the comment, "Expect to see a quietly functioning city government in 2000. There isn't a clear majority, or a spectacular agenda, or a divisive issue (perhaps next year will bring one?). But if there is an 'odd man out' on the council, it would have to be Jim Cahill who, for better or worse, doesn't quite fit with the other four."

Mr. Cahill offers this response:

It was with interest (and amusement!) that I noted your editorial of December 29, wherein you described me as the "odd man out" on the City Council. I imagine that statement was intended as some sort of slight. You might be surprised, therefore, to learn that I not only agree with you, I consider it a compliment, however unintentional.

I did not run for office in order to "fit in" with the other members of the Council. Do you honestly think that the voters care more about Council Members being friends than they do about having genuine discussion of issues? Perhaps I suffer from a limited imagination, but I can not believe the citizens would trade "happy talk" for substantive discussions.

One primary reason I ran for this office was to highlight the fact that too much emphasis has historically been placed on fitting in, and not enough on representing the diverse viewpoints within our city. I was elected, in part, because at least 3,400 people in this city do not want a "good ol' boys club" that governs with a wink and a nod, but instead want open, independent leadership. Regrettably, we are still far from such a goal. The other members of the Council may not share my opinions on how to open up the process, but I must believe in their honest desire to provide equal representation to all points of view. Through open discussion we can reach a consensus that serves the public interest. Note that discussion precedes consensus, not the other way around.

You, as an editor of one of the two weekly papers in our city, can be of great help in opening up the government process and getting more complete information to the public. You could extend your concerns about the school board's Brown Act compliance to the City Council. You could try actually going to the meetings you report on. Perhaps you might considering more than one person for a story -- maybe even one that doesn't agree with you. Step outside your office, and your comfort zone, once in awhile instead of relying on press releases and second hand information. And, just for the sake of neatness, you could proof read your paper before publishing!

Most thinking people want to hear the issues for themselves and don't rely on your paper, or my positions, to make up their own minds on what constitutes the best public course of action. With that in mind, I will continue to honor my campaign promise to be genuinely independent and to fight to open up the process, so that is truly public. Please join me to make this goal a reality.

Bus service

To follow up on last week's article, "County agency helps employers find just the right new hire":

Considering the water damage to City Hall and the subsequent YoloBus meeting, it was emphasized that midday bus service for the temporary city hall -- at or near former Social Security Office location on Halyard Drive/south of Highways Business 80 and 50 off Harbor Blvd. -- would be provided even if it meant stepping up the planned increase in YoloBus services.

This will be at least a "double plus" for not only the reasons mentioned in the December 29 article, but since we will finally have midday bus service in our Industrial Park area -- where over the years many jobs have not been filled, due to lack of said bus service -- fuller employment should be expected, especially for that area. With the welfare reform and Temporary Assistance to Needy Families/TANF grants that our County's Department of Employment and Social Services will be administering, we should see far fewer jobless folks.

Let's hope those in charge of the new bus service remember that we have several places of employment in the Industrial Park that have "round the clock employment," including the area's main post office. Access is a key word.

Also, remember, we already have a branch of Sacramento City College in that same former social security building; thus, another major need for midday bus service would be appropriately served.

The first of these cabins is now finished and consists of two rooms built solidly and equipped with electric lights, gas stoves for cooking and heating and other home conveniences. The location of the camping ground is south of the M street bridge, opposite the rice mills, and is an ideal place because considerable shade helps to make the location agreeable.

Boys around town are telling a good story on Much Mathena, at which Mathena is somewhat incensed but declares that the story is true nevertheless. It seems that Mathena, John Patterson, John Steuben and Sam Steuben went out before the closing of the deer season to get a buck or two in the Siskiyou mountains. On Plum Creek they were getting along splendidly and trudging over the mountains in search of a buck. Suddenly a wild boar came tearing out of the brush and came straight at Mathena. Like a good hunter, his rifle was ready for action and he fired at the boar, but while maiming him failed to kill the animal. The boar kept coming and Mathena's gun jammed. Seeing his danger and the possibility of being knocked out by a wild boar, Mathena faced the first tree and climbed as quickly as he possibly could out of the reach of the hog. John Patterson, seeing his predicament and seeing him drop his gun, started to laugh and to save his life could not take a shot at the boar. Steuben came along and seeing Mathena on a branch of the tree about forty feet from the ground, he, too, started to laugh but soon quieted down when the boar came charging after him. It was then that John Patterson came to his senses and realized that he, too, was in danger. One well directed shot laid the boar prostrate and when the boys got to the camp they found they had 250 pounds of good hog meat. But Mathena declares he will never go into that locality again in search of deer.

Let no man say that Joe Beltrami doesn't know how to shoot, and let nobody repeat that Beltrami doesn't know the difference between a mud hen and a mallard. With Tug Wilson and Grant De Riso, Joe went to Princeton last Sunday to the Gordon Gun Club grounds for a duck shoot. They went early and having hired the club grounds for themselves for that day, each one of them got the limit. Indeed, so much of a limit did they get that many friends of the three have been surfeited with duck ever since. On a previous visit to the Gordon Gun Club, as related in the Independent, Beltrami landed a lot of mud hens ,but nevertheless the mud hens did not go to waste. They made a splendid feed. Not satisfied with the returns of last Sunday, Beltrami went out again last Wednesday with Grant De Riso and Angelo Bonomi. Again they got the limit of ducks, and now Beltrami declares that nobody can say of him that he doesn't know the difference between a mud hen and a duck. Several friends who have a tooth for duck have been helped out considerably in the aching void which occurs when the feeling that duck is good meat.

Gambling Houses Raided by Sheriff Monroe and Constable Wilson and All Are Closed Permanently

Yesterday afternoon Constable Wilson, accompanied by Sheriff Monroe, raided every gambling house in the vicinity of Washington and arrested eight Chinamen against whom charges were placed for conducting a gambling game.

More or less disguised, Sheriff Monroe and Constable Wilson first visited the California Company north of town. Here three Chinese were arrested, but evidence of gambling found in their possession was so slight that Sheriff Monroe believed the Chinese could not be convicted on the evidence taken. The Chinese were not taken in the actual conduct of any percentage or illegal game.

Lee Fong, Gong Fong and Jim Song were arrested at this place.

In the neighborhood two Chinese were taken in what is known as the London Company. These gave their names as Ah Sing and Ah Fong.

In the possession of these latter Chinese cards were found but no money was taken by the officers.

At the Union Company place, south of town or south of the highway in West Sacramento, three Chinese were taken and a charge placed against them of conducting a lottery. Some tickets were also taken up by the officers, but they were not marked nor had they been sold nor was there any drawing nor was there any evidence of money being transferred on lottery chances as indicated by tickets taken by the officers.

Before Judge Barry charges were sworn to on information and belief by Sheriff Monroe and Constable Wilson that the Chinamen were conducting lotteries or crap games.

Judge Barry placed the crap players or those accused of playing craps under a cash bond of $100 and the other Chinese were placed under bonds of $150 cash.

It is believed that all these Chinamen will stand trial when their cases come before the court and it is feared that no conviction can be secured because the evidence gathered by the officers is not of such character as would convince a jury to find them guilty.

Judge Barry will set the date for their trial either next Monday or Tuesday.

The difficulty surrounding the arrest of these Chinese on charges of gambling have often been recited.

In their own peculiar way these Chinese conduct these games and whether they play for money or marbles Americans are usually at a loss to know.

The state law forbids the playing of percentage games or banking games, but it is hard to tell whether the Chinese make a banking or percentage game of those they conduct in the places north and south of Washington.

AUTO PLUNGE NEAR M STREET BRIDGE NEARLY SERIOUS

Last Monday morning while Mrs. E. A. Paulson of Sacramento with her mother, Mrs. A. P. Johnson, and Mrs. W. McCarthy were returning to Sacramento near the M street bridge their automobile was upset and Mrs. Paulson seriously injured.

Driving a Ford coupe, Mrs. Paulson, to avoid running down two children who were riding a bicycle, turned the machine toward the edge of the embankment of the Sacramento Northern tracks. Failing to measure the distance accurately she went too far out of the way, overbalancing the auto which rolled over and crushed in the top.

Neighbors extricated the three women from the wrecked car and found Mrs. Paulson to be badly injured.

She sustained several light scratches and a sprained hip.

She was taken to the emergency hospital in Sacramento and given immediate treatment, but is now able to be around again.

Mrs. Paulson was a former resident of Washington but lately moved to the Dee Apartments in Sacramento.

Her mother, Mrs. Johnson, and Mrs. McCarthy were not injured in the wreck.

SEED LAW MUST BE OBSERVED BY GROWERS

One demonstration of the importance of clean and inspected seed is cited by County Horticultural Commissioner Harold M. Van Tassel in connection with the Haskell property on Merritt Island in the Clarksburg district, now operated by Sarah Miller. Seed was purchased from a nearby Japanese to plant the land which was free from all noxious weeds or growth pests. Now the owner is subjected to the enforcement of state laws, and a heavy cost to eliminate Johnson Grass. The importance of inspected seed is being stressed by Van Tassel as a solution for the elimination of weed pests which annually cost the ranchers and orchardists large sums of money. Inspection costs nothing while the noxious seeds are an expense from the moment they are "bought and paid for."

WESTGATE HOMES MULTIPLYING WITH MANY NEW OWNERS

Deeds to thirty-six new homes that are now finished in Westgate are held in escrow by the Central California Development Company.

That means that thirty-six new homes have been finished in Westgate and that these homes have been purchased by intending residents of the district.

Early in November it is the intention of the Central California Development Company to start building more new homes but in the meantime there are eighteen houses now under construction.

These figures may seem astonishing to some residents of Sacramento who have not lately visited Westgate. Nevertheless they are correct.

Many men are busy in the various employments of home building throughout the district. Some are laying concrete for foundations. Some are plastering, and many homes are being fitted with mill work turned out by the planing mill in Westgate.

Three families are about to move in, J. J. Scott of Oakland, A. Wildburger of Sacramento and L. H. Saunders of Oakland. These three families will be in their homes in Westgate during the coming week.

E. M. McAtee has moved from Sacramento into his new home in Westgate.

S. M. Frank of San Diego is one of the late purchasers of homes in Westgate. As soon as his home is finished he intends to move his family from the southern part of the state.

W. D. Shelley of Fairplay, El Dorado County, has purchased a home near headquarters and is hurrying things along so that he can move in his family at as early a date as possible.

In the Westgate district electricity, gas and water are available supplies for every home.

Conveniences enjoyed only in large cities are at the call of the home owners of Westgate.

The telephone service, which was ample during several years past, is now becoming congested, but last week a survey of the district was made by the Pacific Telephone and Telegraph Co. so that a 100-wire cable might be stretched for the accommodation of the people.

Several stores have been erected and are now being finished. Demand of renters has been so active that it is believed by the promoters that as soon as the stores are finished they will all be taken up immediately.

WORK PROGRESSING ON RIVER LEVEE ROAD SOUTH OF WESTGATE

The clearing of brush from the river levee road south of West Sacramento as far as Riverview has practically been completed.

Grading on this stretch of road for a distance of about four miles is to be started immediately, so that if possible the road may be in condition for the winter season.

This stretch of road runs on top of the levee and has not been used since the levee was thrown up by the West Sacramento Company several years ago.

The old road on the old levee inside the new levee was the popular road-

WOMAN IS HELD UP AND BADLY BRUISED BY THUG

Last Saturday night about 7 p. m., Mrs. Mae Grammer, a resident of the West Side Auto Camp, south of the subway at the end of Fifth street, on her way from her work from Sacramento, was strong-armed on the Sacramento Northern embankment by a thug who had followed her from Sacramento.

Employed at the Stoll Hotel, Mrs. Grammer was on her way home and noticing a man following her she made haste along the railroad embankment but was overtaken by the thug.

Throwing her down between the railroad tracks he stuffed cloth into her mouth and started to rob her. The approach of a passenger train from Sacramento on its way to Woodland cut short the ordeal. He ran southward towards the jungles near the rice mills.

Removing the clothes from her mouth, Mrs. Grammer set up an alarm and several neighbors came to her rescue. The roads southward from the railroad embankment were patrolled for a considerable time but no trace of the thug could be found.

Constable Wilson was notified and he gathered a posse of the Washington boys but they were unable to locate anybody answering the description of the man who assaulted Mrs. Grammer. The approach of the lighted train scared the thug, but before leaving the prostrate woman he rolled her off the embankment and in this she was badly bruised and scratched.

Mrs. Grammer has an invalid husband who is unable to work at the present time and consequently she is forced to make a living for the family.

For several days after the attempted holdup she was under the care of physicians.

The holdup took place on the railroad embankment about half way between the M street bridge and subway at Fifth street.
